Irish Unity push strengthens

In the last few months the campaign for a united Ireland has gained momentum. Resolutions and proclamations supporting Irish unity have been adopted across the United States. From New York and Massachusetts to California, Americans are voicing their support for a united Ireland.

SPEAKING at the San Francisco, California United Ireland Forum in 2009, Sinn Féin President Gerry Adams stated that Irish Americans and the Irish Diaspora would be crucial in any attempt to unite the 32 counties. "This generation can make that dream a reality," Adams said, "That means not just dreaming about or singing about it, but actually doing something about it."

Presenting the Proclamation for Irish Unity by Long Beach City Council recently, Councilman Patrick O'Donnell stated that "The democratic reunification of Ireland is the ultimate roadmap to peace and prosperity for the Irish nation and its people."

Along with Long Beach, resolutions have recently been passed in Lewis and Clark County, Montana, by Springfield City Council, Massachusetts and the humanitarian organization, Veterans For Peace chapters in New York City and Denver, Colorado.

Montana's Lewis and Clark County signed a proclamation on March 17th, supporting a united Ireland, declaring that "The time has come to end the partition of Ireland in favor of a united sovereign nation that guarantees equal rights and equal opportunities for all its citizens".

Honourary degree conferred on Alex Maskey

Sinn Féin MLA Alex Maskey has been conferred with an Honourary Degree at LeMoyne College, Syracuse,

New York. The degree of Doctor of Humane Letters was conferred at LeMoyne College's commencement ceremony on May 20th.

The degree from the college was in recognition of Alex's service to the community, his perseverance in building peace and his continuing work for reconciliation.

Alex first spoke at LeMoyne in March this year and made a memorable impression on both faculty and students.

In introducing him at the commencement ceremony, Patron of the college, Dan Young said, "As a Councilor, as Mayor of Belfast and now as a member of the power sharing government, Alex Maskey continues to act in an inclusive manner."

"He played a leading role in the Irish Peace Process and continues to work to see all the promises of the historic Good Friday Agreement fulfilled."

Sinn Féin MLA Alex Maskey

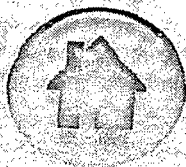

Jim Cullen appointed to President of FOSF

Friends of Sinn Féin USA was set up in 1995. FOSF USA has raised substantial funds in the years since to support Sinn Féin's efforts in the Peace Process and help achieve Sinn Féin's aims of peace, justice and a United Ireland.

Under the direction of FOSF President Larry Downes, it has proved an efficient and effective channel through which people in the US can support Sinn Féin. Larry has been Sinn Féin's registered agent since 1996. He has now decided to step down from his role as President of FOSF and Sinn Féin's agent in the USA. We are indebted to him for his 16 years of service. He has made FOSF USA the success it is. He is a valued and trusted friend whose advice, guidance and commitment is deeply appreciated.

Jim Cullen, who is well known in the US activist circles, has agreed to act as Sinn Féin's agent and FOSF USA President.

Your help is invaluable to Sinn Féin's success

A chairde

Sinn Féin is the only all-Ireland party. In the past year we have fought six elections North and South. In every election our vote went up.

Recently, Sinn Féin were the main opposition to an Austerity Treaty that was proposed by the Fine Gael/Labour coalition government which places a huge burden of debt on the already struggling Irish tax payers. While the treaty was passed, we raised many issues that are of real concern to the ordinary working people of Ireland and will continue to do so.

We have held four major conferences on Irish unity, most recently in Derry, starting a real debate on the issue in the lead up to the 100th Anniversary of the 1916 Rising.

This would not be possible without your help. To all of you who have played a role in bringing us closer to our shared vision of Irish Unity and Independence I send a sincere thank you.

Go raibh míle maith agat.

Students from Battleboro High School, California visit Belfast...

Conor Murphy and Alex Maskey meet with students from Battleboro High School, CA, USA, during a recent visit to the Assembly. Conor spoke to them about the conflict in Ireland and his involvement in the Peace Process as a Sinn Féin negotiator.

Martin McGuinness on historic gestures, reconciliation and Irish Unity

THERE have been many momentous and indeed historical moments which have marked my 40 years in struggle. Some have been highly political, others have been highly significant and some have been highly symbolic. Yesterday's meeting with Queen Elizabeth in Belfast embraced all of these things.

It was a meeting which, although short in length, can, I believe, have much longer effects on defining a new relationship between Britain and Ireland and between the Irish people themselves.

Britain's involvement in Irish affairs has been marked by colonialism, plantation, division and partition. It has been bad for Ireland and her people and bad for Britain and her people. We have been left to deal with that legacy. It is a legacy which has contaminated normal politics and normal relations between our islands for generations.

It gave rise to the conditions which fostered inequality, division and conflict. Second-class citizenship for nationalists in the North was underwritten by successive British governments.

For 40 years my life has been about changing all of that.

Massive progress has been made. We have transformed society in the North. But that transformation has come at a heavy price on all sides. Over 3,000 people lost their lives in the course of the conflict. Many more suffered injury and loss. Every single violent act was evidence of a failure of politics and a failure of British policy in Ireland.

We are emerging from a conflict that resulted in lives being lost and families being devastated. I genuinely regret every single life that was lost during that conflict and today I want every family who lost a loved one to know that your pain is not being ignored and I am willing to work with others to finding a way to deal with our past so that we can complete our journey to true reconciliation.

I hear some commentators talk about the Good Friday Agreement being reached back in 1998 and following a successful completion of an Assembly mandate that the Peace Process has come to a conclusion. I do not share this view, it is wrong and it is a mistake. The task of building national reconciliation is as much a part of the Peace Process as anything that has gone before.

But national reconciliation will not be built on a shaky foundation of people questioning the legitimacy of positions adopted over the course of the conflict or by attempts to demean or denigrate those who were involved in it.

National reconciliation will be built on the firm foundation of mutual respect and decisive actions. That is the context within which I met Queen Elizabeth this week.

I was - in a very pointed, deliberate and symbolic way - offering the hand of friendship to unionists through the person of Queen Elizabeth for which many unionists have a deep affinity. It is an offer I hope many will accept in the same spirit it was offered.

Unfortunately, to date, the British state has refused to even acknowledge its role as a combatant in the conflict. That position is no longer tenable as we move forward. It is insulting to victims of events like

Bloody Sunday in my own city, where 14 people were killed, and it is insulting to people's intelligence. It is also excluding the British state from assisting a genuine process of national reconciliation in Ireland, a process which, though embryonic, is nevertheless underway.

There are issues that have not been brought to a conclusion, specifically the issue of the legacy of the conflict. The British Government has a big role to play in that.

Many people in the North who are big supporters of the Peace Process are hurt. Just last week, relatives of those killed in the Ballymurphy Massacre were told by British Secretary of State Owen Paterson that they would not have the type of inquiry that they were looking for, the kind of investigation that they wanted, into the deaths of their loved ones killed by the British Army. Likewise, the British commitment at Weston Park for an inquiry into the murder of human rights lawyer Pat Finucane has not been implemented. The government in London needs to stop obstructing these matters.

Indeed, in recent times this British government has made a series of unhelpful decisions, including the revocation of the licence of Marian Price and the continuing imprisonment of Martin Corey on the same basis. People may be shocked to discover that Peter Robinson and myself have met American President Barack Obama more times that we have met David Cameron in our role as First and deputy First Ministers. This lack of engagement by David Cameron is a serious mistake and may provide a rationale for some of the damaging decisions made by Owen Paterson during his tenure at the NIO.

I am absolutely committed to the achievement of a New Republic in Ireland. I believe that the Good Friday Agreement offers us a clear, democratic roadmap to get there. Under that agreement the Government of Ireland Act was repealed and the British Government has committed to legislating for Irish unity in the event of a 60-plus-one result in a Border poll.

The number of new jobs, 96,000, fell below consensus expectations but did not provide dramatic news that would change the current economy.

Many voters learn about political events watching them live, but by seeing the jobs report will compete for their attention.

The net result is that the jobs report will force, rather than shift, the status quo in the race.

◦ The August jobs report likely to bounce President Obama might at party's convention.

The number of new jobs, 96,000, fell below consensus expectations but did not provide dramatic news that would change the current economy.

Many voters learn about political events while watching them live, but by seeing the jobs report will compete for their attention.

The net result is that the jobs report will force, rather than shift, the status quo race.

◦ Outside spending on the presidential campaign has already topped its 2008 totals.

The amount spent by super PACs, political non-profit groups and other nonpolitical party entities on the presidential and congressional races, about $306.2 million as of Sept. 5, is already more than such groups spent during the entirety of the last presidential election cycle, about $301.6 million.

Traditionally, outside groups reserve the bulk of their spending for the two-month period occurring between the party conventions and Election Day.

ago. President Barack Obama's improving poll numbers and a series of events during the past few weeks have given top Democrats hope that this cycle might be better for their House candidates than they thought.

"I think that Democratic candidates and campaigns are showing a lot of promise," Democratic pollster Jef Pollock said, noting a series of recent nonpartisan polls have shown Democrats in swing districts in good shape. "Right now, it doesn't feel like a wave, it feels very individual, so these individual polls matters."

But Republicans push back that the landscape is mostly unchanged.

"I don't think that there have been any encouraging signs on the House of Representatives front for the Democrats in six months," GOP strategist Brad Todd said. "All the data I have seen in 50 districts indicates that Democrats are going to struggle to gain more than a couple of seats."

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee and the National Republican Congressional Committee have begun their independent expenditure spending in earnest, and both are, more or less, on offense. The DCCC IE has aired or is airing ads in 16 races, three-quarters of which are against Republican Members. The NRCC IE has aired or is airing ads in 21 districts, about half of them against Democratic incumbents. Many of the Republican ads launched this week.

Both parties have been working to expand the map of competitive races. The NRCC has been airing ads, for example, against Iowa Democratic Reps. Bruce Braley and Dave Loebsack, who have been considered in pretty comfortable shape to this point, especially Braley.

The DCCC has been pushing to expand its map in similar ways, leading DCCC Chairman Steve Israel (N.Y.) to remain confident the House is "absolutely in play."

Israel said August had been a good month for the party.

"I think we got our mojo back in August," he said in an interview with Roll Call last week.

The chairman cited three events he saw as moving the momentum behind his party. The first was GOP presidential nominee Mitt Romney's choice of Rep. Paul Ryan (Wis.) as his running mate, which he said helped to nationalize the debate about Medicare.

The second was Missouri GOP Senate nominee Rep. Todd Akin's comments about "legitimate rape." And the third was the revelation that some freshman House Members had gone swimming in the Sea of Galilee on an official trip to Israel last year—including one Member without his bathing suit.

Republicans deny Democrats have gotten any momentum at all in recent weeks, pointing to a still-troubled economic picture.
